Benedict Arnold, the capture of Major Andre, and the intelligence received by General Washington through his confidential agents in New-York, that many of his officers, and especially a major-general, were connected with Arnold, engrossed his mind entirely, and excited the most unpleasant reflections. The moment he reached the army, then under the command of Major General Greene, encamped in the vicinity of Tappan, he sent for Major Henry Lee, posted with the light troops some distance in front. This officer repaired to headquarters with celerity, and found the General in his marquee alone, busily engaged in the author of this paper held the rank of major, and was serving under General Washington, on the Hudson River, at the time of the capture of Andre in 1780..
