

Letters From the South, Vol. 2 of 2: Written During an Excursion in the Summer of 1816 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Letters From the South, Vol. 2 of 2: Written During an Excursion in the Summer of 1816 Dear Frank, The other day, in taking a ramble from the Spring, I came to where a fine trout stream of a most promising appearance skirted the foot of a long rambling hill. The sight of this brook revived my old propensity to fishing, which I ascribe to having early in life fallen in with honest Isaac Waltons work on angling; to my mind, one of the most pleasant books in the language. He mingles so much of a taste for natural beauty, so much of poetical feeling and description, and so much genuine simplicity, with his art, that one cant help loving the honest fisherman. The book begins with a dialogue between a fowler, a hunter, and an angler; in which each endeavours to establish the superiority of his favourite amusement.
